

INTERNATIONAL GRADUATE SCHOOLS ABROAD

Almost any school abroad offering graduate level study will accept “international” students. Students should find appropriate schools abroad that offer the type of research and academic program that they are interested in or are located in an area of interest. Students should work with the Office of International Exchange, the Career Services and Professional Life Development Office or faculty members doing similar research to see if they have recommendations. Or, students can work with the Career Services and Professional Life Development office for more information on researching graduate schools. Once you have found an appropriate school abroad you should locate their international office (remember that they will view you as an international student) to determine the application process and any additional admission steps required with regard to funding and immigration.

Students might also use the following web resources:

A master's degree pursued abroad offers you unprecedented advantages in terms of academic quality, cost and length of time

In most cases, you can earn a masters degree in one year though our affiliation with seven highly regarded internationally acclaimed universities in Australia and the United Kingdom.

Hundreds of subject areas are available, many of a highly specialized nature. This ensures that you'll be able to find a program that meets your precise academic and professional interests, whether you want to prepare to enter a Selected professional field or continue toward a doctoral degree.

Because you can complete a master's degree in one year, you'll most likely find overseas graduate study to be more economical than domestic study. In most instances, a federal student loan can cover the complete cost of your tuition and housing.

AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES ABROAD

The following schools are American Universities that are located in other countries. You would apply there the same way you would apply to a graduate school program here in the United States.
